OPENING THE DISCUSSION

What happens when 500 cities with no network connecting them nationally?

Across Indonesia, more than 500 local governments have adopted Healthy City programmes on their own — without a national network, coordination stays fragmented, and hard-won lessons never reach the next city.

Fragmented

Each city solving the same problems alone, with no shared channel to learn from the others.

1 Network

A national forum built to connect every city's experience into one shared system.

COLLABORATIVE CITIES
FOR A HEALTHIER INDONESIA

Formalizing a grassroots movement into a legally anchored national institution

The Gap: Local and provincial forums lacked a central node for national coordination.

Bottom-Up Formation:
Built by existing Kabupaten/Kota Sehat forums, for their members.
Never imposed top-down.

Legally Binding:
Governed by an AD/ART constitution and officially ratified by Indonesia's Ministry of Law & Human Rights.

Designing a neutral platform to drive multisectoral collaboration.

Swasti Saba:

Key Lessons for Other Countries

SHARING EXPERIENCES • STRENGTHENING COLLABORATION • BUILDING HEALTHIER CITIES

HEALTHY
BRIGHTER

1

Formalize the network

Give the national forum legal status and government recognition — not just an informal network.

2

Align governance with learning

Sync your national meeting cycle with a shared summit, combining decisions and best-practice exchange.

3

Build tiered representation

Connect national, regional and city levels so learning reaches — and returns from — every locality.

4

Design inclusive membership

Bring government, business, academia, media and civil society in from the start.

Diversify funding sources

Blend member dues with national/regional budgets to protect independence and continuity.
